1. If Photoshop is running on your computer, launch Photoshop or open an existing image. Otherwise, press . 2. Choose File⇒New (Windows) or Photoshop Elements⇒New (Mac). This opens the Photoshop or Photoshop Elements file dialog box. 3. Navigate to the folder where you want to create your project, and select the PSD file you want to open. Click Open. 4. The file opens automatically in the Photoshop screen. Navigate to the layers you want to work with, as shown in Figure 15-6, and drag the first layer to the top of the layers palette. Label this layer `Title`. Figure 15-6: The layers palette offers a palette of tools and templates for creating and organizing layers. The layers palette has a variety of tools and templates that can create and modify layers and groups of layers — which in turn allow you to create a variety of effects. The useful features of the layers palette include the ability to align, move, resize, duplicate, and lock layers; change opacity, blend mode, and color, and then delete, hide, merge, or duplicate layers. Customizing the Basic Photoshop Screen The Photoshop screen (shown in Figure 15-7) allows you to set the following basic parameters for editing images: * **Image Size:** This determines your editing window. The default size is 20 percent of your monitor's size, so if you have a 1280 x 800 monitor, you can see a portion of your monitor's screen. You can adjust the size of the window easily in the Custom size section of the Image Size panel (see Figure 15-8). * **Drawing Tools:** This option is covered in the next section. * **Layers:** In the Layers panel (see Figure 15-9), you can adjust the properties of any single layer. With the layers palette, you can work with groups of layers to build and modify complex images. The general settings of the Layers panel include such options as blending mode and opacity (refer to Figure 15-9). * **Brightness/Contrast:** For the best results, you should adjust the image's brightness and contrast for a better image. To do so, click the dialog box launcher button at the bottom of the Layers panel (refer to Figure 15-9). The Brightness/Contrast dialog box opens. Choose an option from the ans in Israel and many other countries have had contact with the new strain of coronavirus (ICTV definition: 2019-nCoV) initially thought to be the cause of the pneumonia outbreak in Wuhan, China. The links between the outbreak of SARS-CoV-2 and those transmitted by bats in the Bangerang population in Southeast Asia are being investigated. Veterinary diagnostics are the cornerstone of human and animal health, with unique purposes, which may vary from curative purposes to preventive purposes. The zoonotic potential of new emerging viruses, such as IBV, SARS-CoV, HCoV-229E and HCoV-OC43, amongst others, highlights the importance of developing and implementing early detection and rapid response systems for viral diseases in animal populations. In this issue of the Annals of the Hellenic Veterinary Society, Ioannis Touliatos et al. describe the results of a study to investigate the presence of viral haemorrhagic diseases in dogs from a shelter in Kastoria, Greece. In a time of greatly reduced animal-related tourism and restrictions on the movement of animals within the European Union, this highlights the veterinary importance of this study. There are no known cases of the new SARS-CoV-2 infections in dogs in Europe, although it would be logical to assume that some animals will have similar infection rates or will become ill, and will require veterinary intervention. Fortunately, unlike other viruses such as SARS-CoV, there is no human-to-animal health risk and the number of dogs infected with this virus is very low. The husbandry of livestock has always been an important part of human agriculture. Poultry, in particular, has been grown on a very large scale. The growth in the demand for meat has been large, with chicken the principal meat, with pork in some countries and lamb and beef in others, and this demand is still increasing. Meat production has always had a close relationship with vaccination, which has been used to prevent infectious diseases. Poultry vaccination is designed to prevent a number of infectious diseases, including reoviruses, Newcastle disease, infectious bronchitis, Mycoplasma gallisepticum, Mycoplasma synoviae, avian cholera and avian influenza. Vaccination has been used for many years, and in the past, subunit vaccines have been given. More recently, acellular

Aging is one of the most significant public health challenges of this century, with significant morbidity and mortality consequences. In addition, the aging process is associated with a shift in the T-helper (Th)1/Th2 Th-cell immune balance from a Th1 to a Th2 response. Recent studies have provided evidence that aging is associated with a loss of the expression of PD-1 on CD4+ and CD8+ T cells. The PD-1:PD-L pathway has been shown to have an important role in peripheral tolerance induction and may also play a key role in immunoregulation. The specific aims of this proposal are: 1. Determine the impact of aging on the PD-1:PD-L pathway in vivo, specifically on: a) the expression of PD-1 on peripheral and mucosal T cells, and b) the expression of PD-L1 on mucosal and non-lymphoid cells; 2. Determine the impact of aging on the PD-1:PD-L pathway ex vivo, specifically on: a) the ability of T cells to become tolerized to self antigens through PD-1:PD-L interactions, b) the ability of T cells to become tolerized to superantigens through PD-1:PD-L interactions; 3. Determine the impact of aging on the PD-1:PD-L pathway in vitro, specifically on: a) the ability of antigen-specific T cells to be tolerized by PD-1:PD-L interactions, and b) the ability of antigen-specific T cells to be tolerized by superantigen-specific T cells through PD-1:PD-L interactions. T cells from young and aged mice will be stimulated with OVA antigen and will be examined for their PD-1 and PD-L expression. OVA-specific T cells will be examined for the ability to become tolerized to self antigens through PD-1:PD-L interactions. These studies will examine the PD-1:PD-L pathway in mice in both steady-state and in vivo-tolerized conditions and may provide insights into the mechanisms that are involved in immune tolerance in aging. Drug-drug interactions between drugs metabolized by CYP3A and drugs interacting with OATP1B1. Interactions between drugs metabolized by cytochrome P450 (CYP) 3A and drugs interacting with OATP1B1,
